Why are tax compliance regulations changing?

Across the globe tax compliance regulations are changing on a regular basis. With a need for greater visibility and transparency tax authorities are putting mandatory processes in place.

Why are governments putting mandatory processes in place?

Governments would like more transparency surrounding VAT. Currently, the worldwide VAT deficit is approximately half a billion Euros. In order to help close the gap governments are implementing mandatory e-invoicing regulations.

E-invoicing requires the electronic creation and exchange of structured data. Mandatory e-invoicing processes provide governments with the visibility and transparency they need to accurately report on business transactions. Thus, providing governments with a full and reliable transaction audit trail. But what does this mean for businesses?

What does this mean for businesses?

The adoption of e-invoicing creates a lot of benefits that favour the business as well as the tax authorities.

Businesses can implement e-invoicing processes within both their procure-to-pay and cash-to-order workflows. E-invoicing automates both of these workflows, by removing the time-consuming, manual tasks.

Read on to discover more business benefits, the current global e-invoicing regulations and how Unifiedpost Group can guide businesses.
